THERE'S ALWAYS BEEN SOMETHING IRRESISTIBLY INVITING ABOUT the Carolina mountains. The sprawling forests and sidwinding trails are perfect for those ready to explore, while the crisp, clean air and still atmosphere are just right for those seeking relaxation. Add in a few gorgeous sunrises and stunning cliffside views, and the Carolina mountains have a recipe that just keeps people coming back for more.

But for some, a few weekends a year just isn't satisfactory. The Carolina mountains offer enough exploration opportunities to last a lifetime. That's why The Cliffs living communities are helping people take full advantage of everything that the mountains have to offer. Club members can create a permanent residence or new vacation home in one of seven communities dispersed throughout the Asheville region, the Mountain region, or the Keowee Lake region.

The Asheville region takes full advantage of the nearby city, encouraging club members to explore its streets just as they would the mountains. There, members will find a bustling arts and music scene, as well as a variety of culinary destinations they won't want to miss. Back at The Cliffs, members can find all sorts of amenities, including clay tennis courts and an 18,000-square-foot wellness center.

Continuing south, prospective club members will run into the mountain region located right around Hendersonville, NC; Flat Rock, NC; and Greenville, SC. The Cliffs communities here are nestled along the mountain valley, surrounded by towering waterfalls and scenic trails. They're also just a short drive away from one of the area's premier culinary destinations, Hotel Domestique. This boutique hotel was designed by Tour de France cyclist George Hincapie as a respite for adventurers looking to fish, golf, hike, and of course cycle along the nearby trails. As a frequent favorite among club members, Hotel Domestique is always ready to welcome newcomers to the community.

For those interested in a different kind of mountain atmosphere, The Cliffs has just the place. In upstate South Carolina lies the Keowee Lake region, known for its 300 miles of shimmering shoreline. This serene lake is not only an excellent destination for those looking to relax on their own personal beach, but also for boaters and fishers looking to have fun out on the water. Plus, the lake is near a variety of state parks, including Table Rock, Toxaway and Oconee. Those who don't want to travel too far can simply enjoy the 20-mile stretch of waterfalls and trails included on The Cliffs community land.

Excited about living by the lake but don't want to pass up the chance to experience the other regions? Don't worry —

The Cliffs take pride in keeping all of their communities as connected as possible. Those living in one area can always visit another and use whatever amenities they'd like.

With three regions and seven communities to choose from, as well as options to build or buy, The Cliffs makes it as easy as possible for prospective members to find their dream home in their dream destination. Those who are ready to join one of The Cliffs communities can start by visiting their website.
